The one trick that I discovered for sharing an entire folder is to use the link at the bottom left to display the old/classic/not-new OneDrive display. For some reason, when using the new version, you can't simply click the checkbox next to the folder and share that with anyone. You have to revert to the previous format, which does let you share the entire folder. That way you don't have to share every file individually.

OK, I'll give OneDrive a spin and see if I can make the technology work. I used to be at this sort of stuff...

The way I've done this is to put all the files into a OneDrive folder and provide access to that. I can't give direct access to the NCA review site, so everyone would need to register and log in. Gets a bit messy.

I can manage that if you'd like. I'll be out from Aug 23 through Sept 4, so you may need to provide access a different way during that time.

The NCA4 agency review is on track to begin next Monday. They are using the USGCRP comment system and are recommending the typical process (give access collect comments in offline spreadsheet). I plan to send out a heads up email Wed and instructions on Monday. Shall I have folks email you for access or can you set it up (without too much pain) so that I can grant access?
